

Maggie Stoeckel, PhD
Assistant Professor, Pediatric Psychologist
Yale School of Medicine

Dr. Maggie Stoeckel is a pediatric psychologist with expertise in the treatment of youth with gastrointestinal conditions. After completing her bachelor's degree in psychology at Harvard University and her PhD in clinical psychology at American University, Dr. Stoeckel completed her residency as well as her fellowship in GI Psychology at Oregon Health & Science University. She has practiced as a GI Psychologist in a variety of settings, including academic medical centers and group private practice. At Yale, Dr. Stoeckel is an embedded provider in the section of Pediatric Gastroenterology and Hepatology, where she looks forward to continuing to offer comprehensive, multidisciplinary care to youth with GI conditions. In addition to her clinical work, Dr. Stoeckel is invested in program development, community outreach, and clinical research.